ABSTRACT

This toolkit provides secondary school teachers with resources to conduct staff or student development on racism. It encourages teachers and students to question their own and others' views about racism, suggests practical and positive ways of tackling racism as a whole-school issue, and provides a set of desired outcomes against which schools can assess their strengths and weaknesses and measure their performance. Part one is designed to raise teachers' and advisors' awareness of the legal and educational case for antiracism. This section suggests strategies for tackling the issue and promoting equality and a positive atmosphere. Part two suggests approaches and learning activities that teachers can use to address racism and related topics in the classroom. It offers five self-standing yet complementary units for raising students' awareness of different aspects of racism. Each section includes introductory notes, good practice checklists, staff training activities, practical classroom exercises or assignments, and suggested resources and contacts. Detailed outcomes are summarized at the beginning of each section and highlighted throughout the text in bold. Part three offers words used to describe individuals and groups. An appendix presents a list of books and resources. (SM)
